Letters to the Editors

Dear Nick Mag,

How long does it take to write an issue of the magazine, print it, and get it into stores?

Nicholas B., age 11 Nashua, New Hampshire

Dear Nicholas,

Making an issue of NICKELODEON MAGAZINE takes about three months—from when we start racking our brains for ideas to when the magazines are in the racks at newsstands and stores. We'd take less time, but if we rack our brains any faster, we'll wreck 'em.

Dear Nick Mag,

How much money does Zelda Van Gutters make?

Katie T., age 10 North Attleboro, Massachusetts

Dear Katie,

Zelda has negotiated a new, top-secret contract with the big bowsers
here at NICKELODEON MAGAZINE. We have no idea what her salary is,
but she was just seen at Groomingdale's buying a solid gold water bowl and a diamond-studded collar.

Do you have a good memory?

It depends. I'm really good at memorizing scripts-but then I'll forget where I put my car keys!

What were your best and worst subjects in school?

The easiest subjects for me were always history and literature. Math and science were harder.

Who would you like to trade brains with?

Sir Isaac Newton [mathematician and physicist], because his brain worked in a completely different way from mine.

Who are your favorite authors?

Growing up, I loved books by Roald Dahl-especially Danny, the Champion of the World. My favorites now are J.D. Salinger and Fyodor Dostoyevsky.

Shawn Wayans of The Wayans Bros.

Who is your all-time favorite teacher?

Miss Clark. She threw birthday parties for everyone and read us books, such as Charlie and the Chocolate Factory. She taught five of the kids in my family, and we still keep in touch with her.

And I thought I was the teacher's pet

Katie Holmes of Dawson's Creek Who is your all-time favorite teacher?

> One of my English teachers back in Toledo, Ohio, named Laura Gallagher. I went to a rather strict all-girls school, but she was very open-minded and down-to-earth.

Is English your best subject?

No, I have a math mind.

9tene Pepperheng studies African gray parrots at the University of Arizona, where she is a professor of psychology and of ecology and evolutionary biology.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: Why did you decide to study bird intelligence?

IRENE PEPPERBERG: About twenty years ago, when I was a chemistry student, I was watching a TV program about birds. It occurred to me that nobody had done the kind of animal communication work with birds that was being done with chimps and dolphins. So, I decided that's what I wanted to do.

How many African gray parrots do you work with?

Three. Alex is twenty-two years old. I've worked with him for twenty-one of those years. Kyaaro is seven-anda-half, and Griffin is a little bit over three.

What kinds of things have they learned?

They can name and categorize objects. Alex knows about fifty different words for objects. The parrots also know quantities up to and including six. And they recognize colors, shapes, and materials.

How do you know the birds really understand things and aren't just "parroting" back answers?

We know because of all the tests we've given them. For example, I'll show Alex two objects and ask him to tell me the color of the bigger object or what's different about the two objects. He has to choose the correct response from many different possible answers. You can't just parrot that.

How do the birds measure up against humans in intelligence?

Very nicely. They're at the level of a four- or five-year-old.

Do they ever say anything funny?

Sometimes Alex gets very agitated or upset and I'll say to him, "Calm down." So now when he sees people in the lab acting upset, he'll say, "Calm down."

Where do you think the expression "birdbrain" came from?

Many people's early experiences with birds are on a farm, and a bird such as a domestic chicken has been bred for stupidity—to sit quietly and not try to escape. But it's amazing how smart wild birds are.

How is what you've learned about birds important to people?

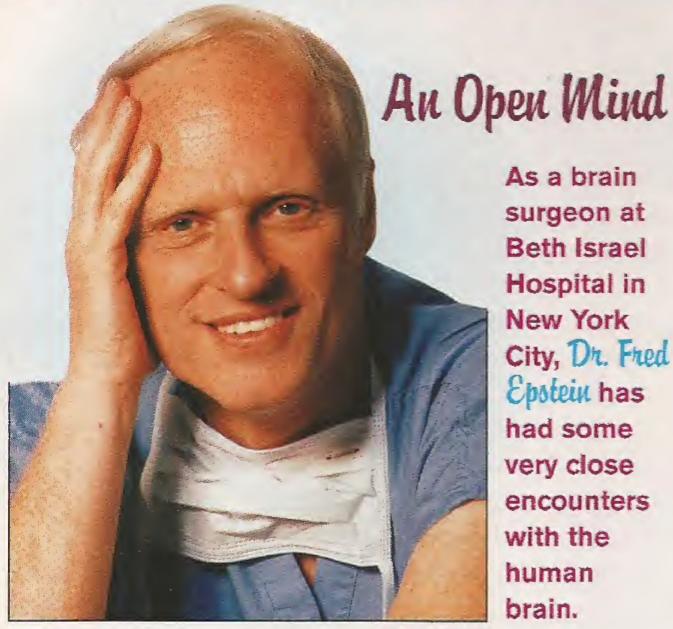

The studies force us to think more about conservation. These animals are so intelligent. We have to be more careful about destroying their habitats. Also, one of my fellow scientists is using the training techniques we use with the birds to help children who have learning problems. She's having great success.

Zelly wants a cracker.

intelligence gave Becky Burcham a piece of their minds. Real

As a brain surgeon at Beth Israel Hospital in New York City, Dr. Fred Epstein has had some very close encounters with the human brain.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: Did you always want to be a brain surgeon?

DR. FRED EPSTEIN: First I wanted to be a garbage man, but by the time I was six or seven years old, I wanted to be a doctor. Then in medical school I became fascinated with neural anatomy [the structure of the nervous system] and surgery, so I went into brain surgery.

Did you get called a brain as a kid?

No. I had learning disabilities. I almost couldn't get through college science. But it taught me not to be afraid of failure. Most people won't take a chance, because they're afraid of looking dumb, but I got used to it.

What surprised you most the first time you saw a human brain?

It pulsates. That's because it has so many blood vessels, which carry nourishment—and the brain needs a lot of nourishment. If you look at a brain, you'd think it was a little bit like a heart because of how it moves.

People use the term gray matter to describe the brain. Is it really gray?

I don't know why they call it gray matter—it's actually pink. Gray matter is just the outer part of the brain. It's only about a quarter-inch thick and is a concentration of nerve cells. It's probably the area of the brain we think with most.

What about the part people call white matter?

White matter is the stuff that's deeper inside. It looks white, because it's made of a fatty substance called myelin. The myelin is like the rubber around electrical wires: It prevents the brain from short-circuiting.

Does having a large head mean you have a big brain? No.

Does having a big brain mean you're smarter? No. Albert Einstein had a very small brain.

What does it mean when people say we only use ten percent of our brains?

I have no idea. I don't know where people came up with that. But it reminds me of when I was in training, and there was a woman who had seizures in the temporal area of the brain [where some memories are stored]. She thought she was in first grade again. She could name every child in her class. We went back and checked, and she was correct. So maybe there's an awful lot of stuff that's stored in the brain, waiting to be called up.

What's the difference between a kid's brain and an adult's brain?

All the elements in a person's brain are there by six or seven years of age. Then the brain continues to grow and expand until about nine or ten years old, when it's pretty close to full size.

Which is sharper: the brain of a typical ten-year-old or a tack?

A ten-year-old. No contest.

Will Neweitt studies artificial intelligence at the Massachusetts
Institute of Technology (MIT), where he has led tours of the lab where robots are built.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: What do scientists study at the Artificial Intelligence Lab study?

WILL NEVEITT: We're studying what it takes to make a machine that can think. We're trying to understand how the brain works by building machines that do what brains do.

Can machines really think?

It depends on your definition of thinking. Machines are good at solving problems that require you to think ahead and look at lots of possibilities—like you do when you play chess. They're less good at being creative or understanding speech, and they don't have common sense.

Are robots examples of artificial intelligence?

Some are—the ones we call autonomous robots can make decisions without being remote controlled. They're different from the robots that are programmed to do exactly the same thing over and over again.

What kinds of things can the robots at the Artificial Intelligence Lab do?

We created one [called 3D Biped, at left] that could do gymnastics. It had two legs and could run on a treadmill, do a full forward somersault and regain its balance.

Could you put a supergymnast computer chip into the brain of someone who had no gymnastic ability and turn him or her into a champion?

The idea of putting computer chips into the brains of living things is one of the most exciting areas of artificial intelligence. People are doing it right now, in very limited ways. Scientists in Japan have been able to wire a computer chip to a cockroach's head, hook the roach up to a joystick, and steer the insect around.

What kinds of things will robots with artificial intelligence be used for?

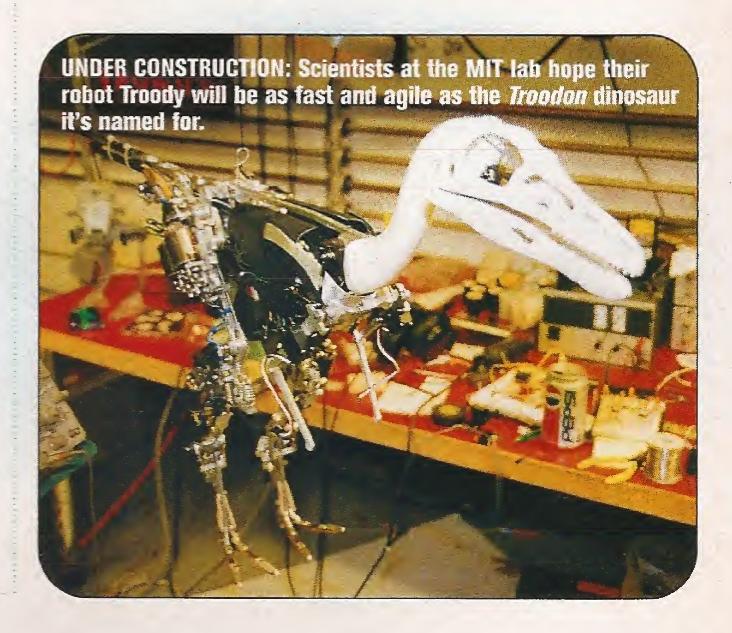

One has already been sent to Mars. We're working on another called Pebbles that will be able to respond to many different situations. If it's walking toward a cliff on Mars, for example, and there isn't enough time for us to send a message from Earth telling it to stop, it will be able to react on its own.

In 1997, a computer named Deep Blue beat world chess champion Garry Kasparov. Is Deep Blue smarter than Kasparov?

Deep Blue might beat him at chess, but if I invented a new card game, Kasparov could probably learn to play it in ten minutes. To get Deep Blue to play something different you'd have to rewrite a large part of the [computer] program. Humans might not be as good as Deep Blue at playing chess, but we're able to do and learn many things very quickly.

Do you think computers will someday be able to do everything the human brain can do?

Yes. It's going to take a long time. There are lots of parts to your brain that seem to have their own tricks, and we're going to have to understand each of those tricks. \square

LEAST WANTED

Robbing a bank is a dumb thing to do.

But for some would-be thieves, the stupidity doesn't stop there.

Here are some examples of criminal mindlessness.

EXCUSE ME, WHAT'S THE QUICKEST WAY TO JAIL?

Cincinnati, Ohio Two years ago, a New Jersey man was in Ohio and decided to rob a bank. When the teller handed over the money, the robber asked her for directions to the interstate. She described how he could get there—and then told police the directions she'd given the thief. The cops quickly nabbed the out-of-town crook, who was carefully following the teller's instructions.

THE EARLY BIRD GETS ARRESTED

Santa Clarita, California In 1995, two eager bank robbers showed up at a bank wearing ski masks, but the door was locked. It was only 8:55 AM—the bank opened at 9:00—so the robbers decided to wait around for five minutes. Observant bank employees inside the building and passersby took one look at the two guys wearing ski masks in the warm southern California weather and called the police.

MAORE AMERICA'S LEAST WANTED

CURSIVE, FOILED AGAIN!

Pearl River, New York A man walked up to a bank teller and silently handed over a note, which demanded all the money in her drawer. The teller couldn't read the man's handwriting, however, so she called over a coworker to help. The second teller also couldn't make out the message, so they asked a third teller. Pretty soon, a whole group of tellers were crowded around the piece of paper. By the time one of them figured out it was a holdup note, the would-be robber had given up and left.

FAKE OUT

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania Last October, a robber stole eleven $100 bills from a bank. Police caught the crook less than a mile away but found only one $100 bill on him. When the cops asked the thief where the missing money was, he explained he had thrown the other ten notes down a sewer, because they were fake. Actually, they were real—they were some of the redesigned $100 bills the U.S. Treasury Department had introduced a year and a half earlier.

DEPOSITED...IN JAIL

Peterborough, Ontario,
Canada In early 1996, police were able to solve a local bank robbery in record time.
A few hours after the crime took place, the crook returned to the very same bank and tried to deposit the stolen money into his account there.

COPPER CAPER

Providence, Rhode Island One thief thought he had scored big when he grabbed four bags of money out of an armored car. The bags turned out to be full of pennies—and weighed 120 pounds. The crook tried to run away with the heavy loot anyway, but he didn't get far before the police caught up to him.

The dumbbell couldn't lift heavy weights.

SMILE AND SAY "SAYONARA"

Arlington, Texas A man who had just robbed an armored car didn't realize he had parked his getaway car next to a bus full of Japanese tourists. As he ran to his vehicle carrying bags of money, the tourists focused their cameras on the crook and snapped away—and the police used the many photos of the robber and his license plate to find the thief.

Scientists think the temporal lobe on the right side of your brain specializes in recognizing faces.

An area near the back of this lobe seems to notice facial features (such as Neve Campbell's eyebrows). The front part of the lobe contains a "catalog" of names and biographical information. In between these two areas is a place that compares one to the other, so you

When you hear something, the ear that's closer to the sound hears it a split second before the other ear. One of the jobs of the auditory cortex is to compare the information from each ear in order to figure out where a sound is coming from.

What you see is processed in the occipital lobe (pronounced ahk-SIH-puhtal lobe). Different areas in the lobe have different specialties, including color, shape, distance, and motion.

You don't have eyes in the back of your head, but your right parietal lobe (pronounced pa-RYE-uh-tal lobe) is almost as good. It holds onto a 3D mental picture of the space around your body, so you can walk up stairs without looking at your feet or pick up a glass of juice without glancing up from your comic book.

Void where prohibited by law. All federal, state, and local laws and regulations apply. All federal, state, and local taxes, and other charges, if any, are the sole responsibility of the winner. Winners will be notified by mail. If a Grand Prize winner is a minor, the prize will be awarded in the name of parent or legal guardian, and he/she must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian. Potential winners will be required to sign and return any required Affidavit of Eligibility/Release of Liability within twenty-one days of notification. Winner's guests will also be required to execute a Liability Release. Limit one prize per family/household. Non-compliance within this time or return of any prize notification as undeliverable may result in disqualification and forfeiture of prize. No substitution or transfer of prize permitted, unless prize is generally available at game's end, in which case a prize of equal or greater value will be substituted. Sponsor is not responsible for lost, late, or misdirected mail. By participating, winner releases Kraft Foods, Inc., its parent, affiliates, subsidiaries, advertising and promotion agencies, the judging organization and their respective directors, officers, employees and agents, from any and all liability with respect to all aspects of the Game and the possession, acceptance, use or misuse of any prizes. By entering the Game, participants

You may not be the smartest person in your class, but here's your big chance to act as though you are. Next time you take a test, follow these simple instructions.

Before the test, ask the teacher:

"Which language do you want the answers in: Latin, Greek, or Sanskrit?"

"We have a whole half-hour to complete the test? What am I supposed to do for the remaining 27 minutes?"

"Is it possible for me to take a few other tests at the same time?"

After the test, say to the teacher:

"I hope you don't hurt your wrist writing all the pluses after the A on mine."

"What was that test supposed to prove—that we're not brain dead?"

Or: When you finish, throw the test to the ground like a football player spiking the ball after scoring a touchdown, and then shimmy around it.

While taking the test, say (loudly enough for all to hear):

"Done!" [Say it as soon as the teacher tells you to begin.]

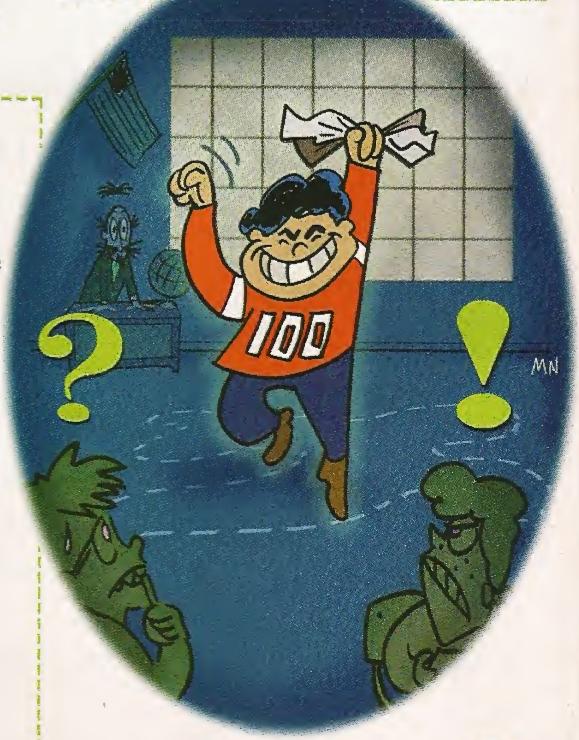

"Only ____ questions?"

"Surely these could be more challenging!"

"What a remarkable coincidence! I think I wrote this test!"

"I mean, how do you expect us to stay awake?"

"I'll put down the answers you want me to say, even though they're wrong."

This reminds me of my school days at Barkley University.

The comic strip Pogo was created in 1948 by Walt Kelly, who had been an animator for the movies Dumbo and Fantasia. Kelly worked on the strip for more than 25 years. Pogo Possum was a mild-mannered marsupial who lived in the Okefenokee swamp (a real swamp in Florida and Georgia) with such arrogant animal friends as Dr. Howland Owl, Albert the Alligator, and a turtle named Churchy-la-Femme.

It's Alive!

Brains and horror movies joined forces for the first time in Frankenstein (1931), in which Dr. Henry Frankenstein creates a man from spare parts found in the cemeteries and gallows in his neighborhood. The creature's body works fine, but unfortunately, Dr. Frankenstein's hunchbacked, butterfingered assistant, Fritz, drops the brain intended for the monster. So the creature gets the "abnormal brain of the typical criminal" instead. This brain bungle causes lots of trouble until villagers with pitchforks do away with Frankenstein's creepy creation.

Better Living Through Chemicals

Unlike Frankenstein, the brain films of the Fifties and Sixties feature evil gray matter with no body at all. In Donovan's Brain (1953), a ruthless financial tycoon nearly dies in a plane crash. A scientist saves his brain and keeps it alive in a fish tank of chemicals. They must be pretty good chemicals, because the brain steadily increases in size and starts telepathically controlling the scientist and making him commit crimes. Donovan's Brain is memorable for its brainy villain and also for co-starring future First Lady Nancy Reagan.

She's Got a Good Head (But No Shoulders)

The Brain That Wouldn't Die (1963) also tells the story of a scientist who saves a brain—only this time it's not a stranger's brain he rescues but his fiancée's.

continued-

The scientist doesn't keep just her brain alive—he saves her whole head. Despite being cut off at the neck, this head can still talk. While she "sits" in a tray in the lab, her boyfriend spends a lot of the movie attending swimsuit competitions to find a new body for her head.

How Vol-Gor!

The Brain From Planet Arous (1958) has one of the strangest plots of any gray-matter movie. An evil floating brain from outer space named Gor takes over a scientist's body and plans to conquer Earth with his "power of pure intellect." With this power, he can blow up planes and buildings. Luckily, a good floating brain, Vol, follows Gor to Earth and tries to stop him. Vol takes over the brain of the scientist's dog so that he can spy on Gor. Eventually this good alien helps some humans bring Gor to a gory end.

The Flying Cerebellum Brothers

Brains in scary movies usually aren't very athleticthey wreak havoc while floating in a tank or sitting in a dish—but not in Fiend Without a Face (1958). In this film, the brainy menaces are invisible through most of the movie, but when they become visible, you can see them crawl, climb, and fly. Another unique feature of these brains is their whip-like spinal cord tails, which they use to strangle their victims.

Bad brain from Fiend Without a Face.

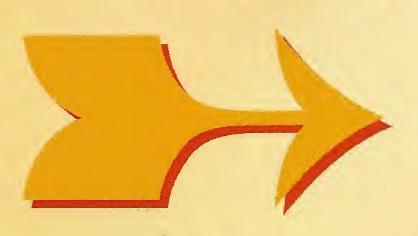

Sub Conscious

In Fantastic Voyage (1966), the brain has no evil powers but still plays a huge role. When an important scientist is found to have an inoperable blood clot in his brain, a submarine is shrunk down to microscopic size so that it can enter the man's body and zap away the clot with a tiny laser. Inside the brain, the really small crew loses their ship to a rampaging white blood cell before they complete their mission.

Empty-Head Syndrome

Eventually TV got in on the brain act with a 1968 episode of Star Trek called "Spock's Brain," back when the crew of the original Enterprise was a lot younger and skinnier. An alien woman beams aboard the starship and steals Mr. Spock's brain, without harming his body. Her motive? She needs it to run a mega-computer that powers her planet. Captain Kirk steals back his friend's brain, and Dr. McCoy reconnects it—with a little coaching from Spock himself. Reconnect me, Scotty!

FROM THE LITE SCIENCE LIBRARY

While doing research for this issue, we stumbled upon an old copy of Meet the Brain, from the 1956 Lite Science Library. Here's an excerpt from that charmingly old-fashioned, outdated volume. Oh, how we have grown!

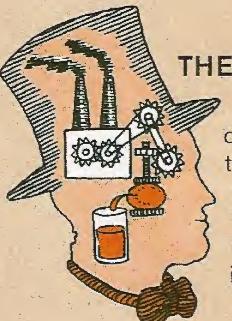

The Mind Through the Ages

The question "What is the human mind?" is almost as old as the human mind itself. Each era in human history, including ours, has had its own answers.

THE STONE AGE (CIRCA 14,000 BC)

French archaeologists working in the Letsgo Caves have recently reconstructed what our cave-dwelling ancestors thought of the mind. Memories, they naively believed, were chiseled into slabs of stone housed inside the skull.

THE INDUSTRIAL AGE (1800s)

During the Industrial Age, scientists obsessed with factories believed that the brain was composed of coal furnaces, gears, and smokestacks. The same scientists figured that bad thoughts were sooty deposits in the back of the mind.

THE ATOMIC AGE (TODAY)

Fortunately, we have come a long way from our misguided ancestors. In today's modern world of 1956, we know that memories are recorded on tiny vinyl 45-rpm records within the soul.

Déjà Vu: Four Theories

Once in a while something happens to you, and it seems as if it has happened before. This is known as déjà vu (French for "already seen"). For centuries, science has tried to explain this puzzling phenomenon. Here are four modern theories:

1 The Van Thalamus Theory

Hans Van Thalamus, a Dutch geneticist and genes manufacturer, maintained that when we have a déjà vu experience, we are actually reliving events that our parents experienced. Van Thalamus later said that not only did his theory make no sense, but he had already come up with the same theory once before.

2 The Rerun Theory

Professor Neelson Familee stated that the brain needs to rest in the summer, so it plays back events, sights, and sounds—or reruns—of things that have already occurred. This theory, however, only explains déjà vus that take place in the summer and does not explain why our memories are commercial-free.

3 The Really, Really Simple Theory

We think something has happened before because it has.

4 The Van Thalamus Theory

Hans Van Thalamus, a Dutch geneticist and genes manufacturer, maintained that when we have a déjà vu experience, we are actually reliving events that our parents experienced. Van Thalamus later said that not only did his theory make no sense, but he had already come up with the same theory once before.

The Capacity to Learn

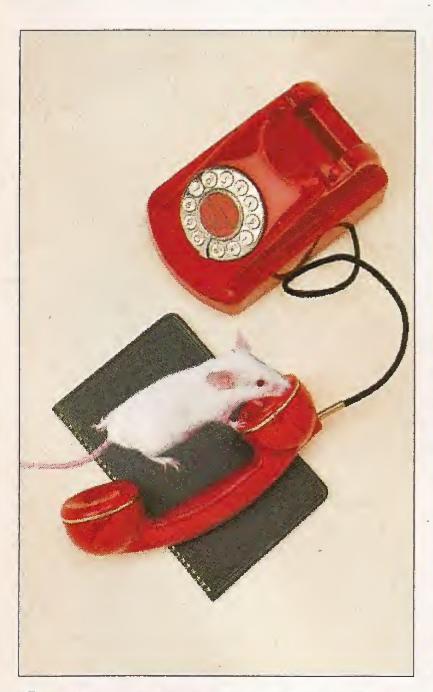

Animals have varying degrees of learning ability. The photos below are from a famous experiment that tested the learning capacity of one of the "lower" animals.

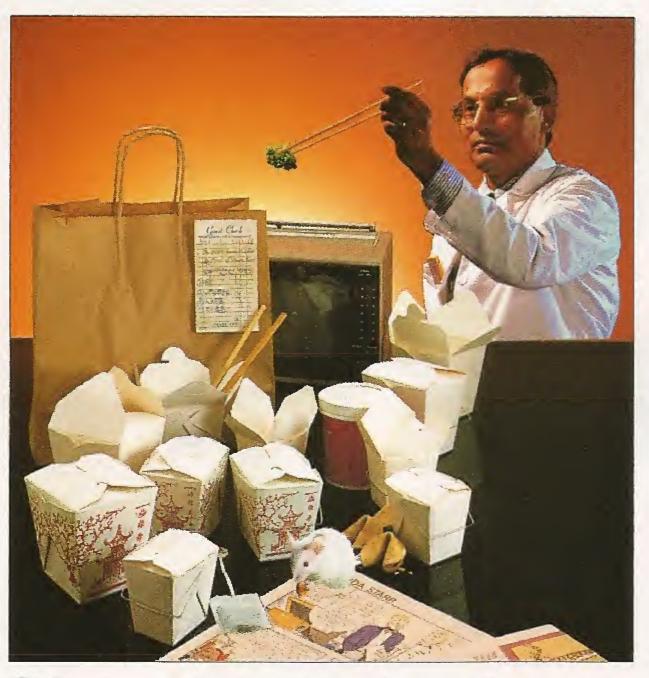

1 First, a researcher placed a mouse in a maze with a tasty bit of cheese in the center.

2 After several tries, the mouse was able to figure out the path to the center of the maze. Upon examining his paltry reward, the mouse shook his tiny fist in rage at the stingy scientist.

3 A few minutes later, the mouse found his way to the telephone, whereupon he ordered Chinese food.

The mouse settled down to a delicious dinner, reading the Sunday paper as he ate. The scientist was generously given one paltry piece of broccoli.

MEASURING THE MIND

Modern science has made many miraculous advances in the study of the brain. The electroencephalograph (EEG) is one of them. Electrodes placed on the skull measure electric waves emitted by the brain. The EEG's printout can reveal many things about the person whose brain waves have been measured.

Motor Mouths

by Andrew Santella

Stock-car driver Jeff Gordon won more races—and money—than any other NASCAR competitor during the 1997 season, and he's headed down the same road for 1998.

MAGAZINE: How old were you when you started racing cars? JEFF GORDON: I started racing quartermidgets when I was five. Quarter-midgets are similar to go-carts, but with roll bars and seat belts. When I was about nine, I stepped up to faster versions that go between fifty and sixty miles per hour.

Is it hot inside your car?

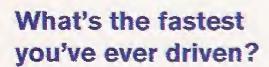

It depends on the weather and how long the race is. I'd say it's about a hundred degrees most of the time. But I've seen the temperature go up to 140 degrees.

What's the most exciting part of a race for you?

The end—especially if there has been a late pit stop. That's when anything can happen. That's when you're in the battle and it's a do-or-die situation to either win the race or lose it.

Do you do anything to keep your reflexes sharp?

I've been playing video games since I was five or six years old. I feel like it helped my hand-eye coordination and my reflexes a bit, especially when I was younger.

We don't have speedometers in our cars, so we don't really go by top speed. We go by fastest lap time. I've definitely driven more than two hundred miles per hour.

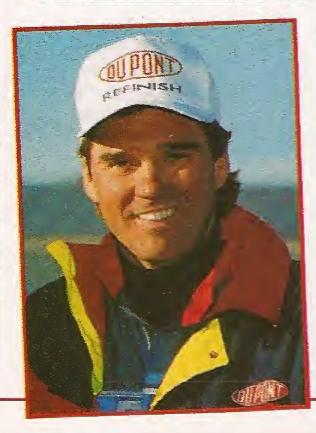

Are you a backseat driver off the track?

I'm horrible. I'm always saying, "Turn here, go here." I do some public appearances, and they'll want to rent a limousine and put me in the back, and I say, "Listen, just get me a car and let me drive."

I'm a backseat drooler.

Crew chief Ray Evernham is in charge of the 30-person team that keeps Jeff's car running.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: What does a crew chief do? RAY EVERNHAM: I do everything from helping design the car to managing the [car-building] shop and communicating with Jeff [via radio] while he's racing. He lets me know how the car is handling, and I let him know when he has to stop in the pit.

How fast can your crew change a tire?

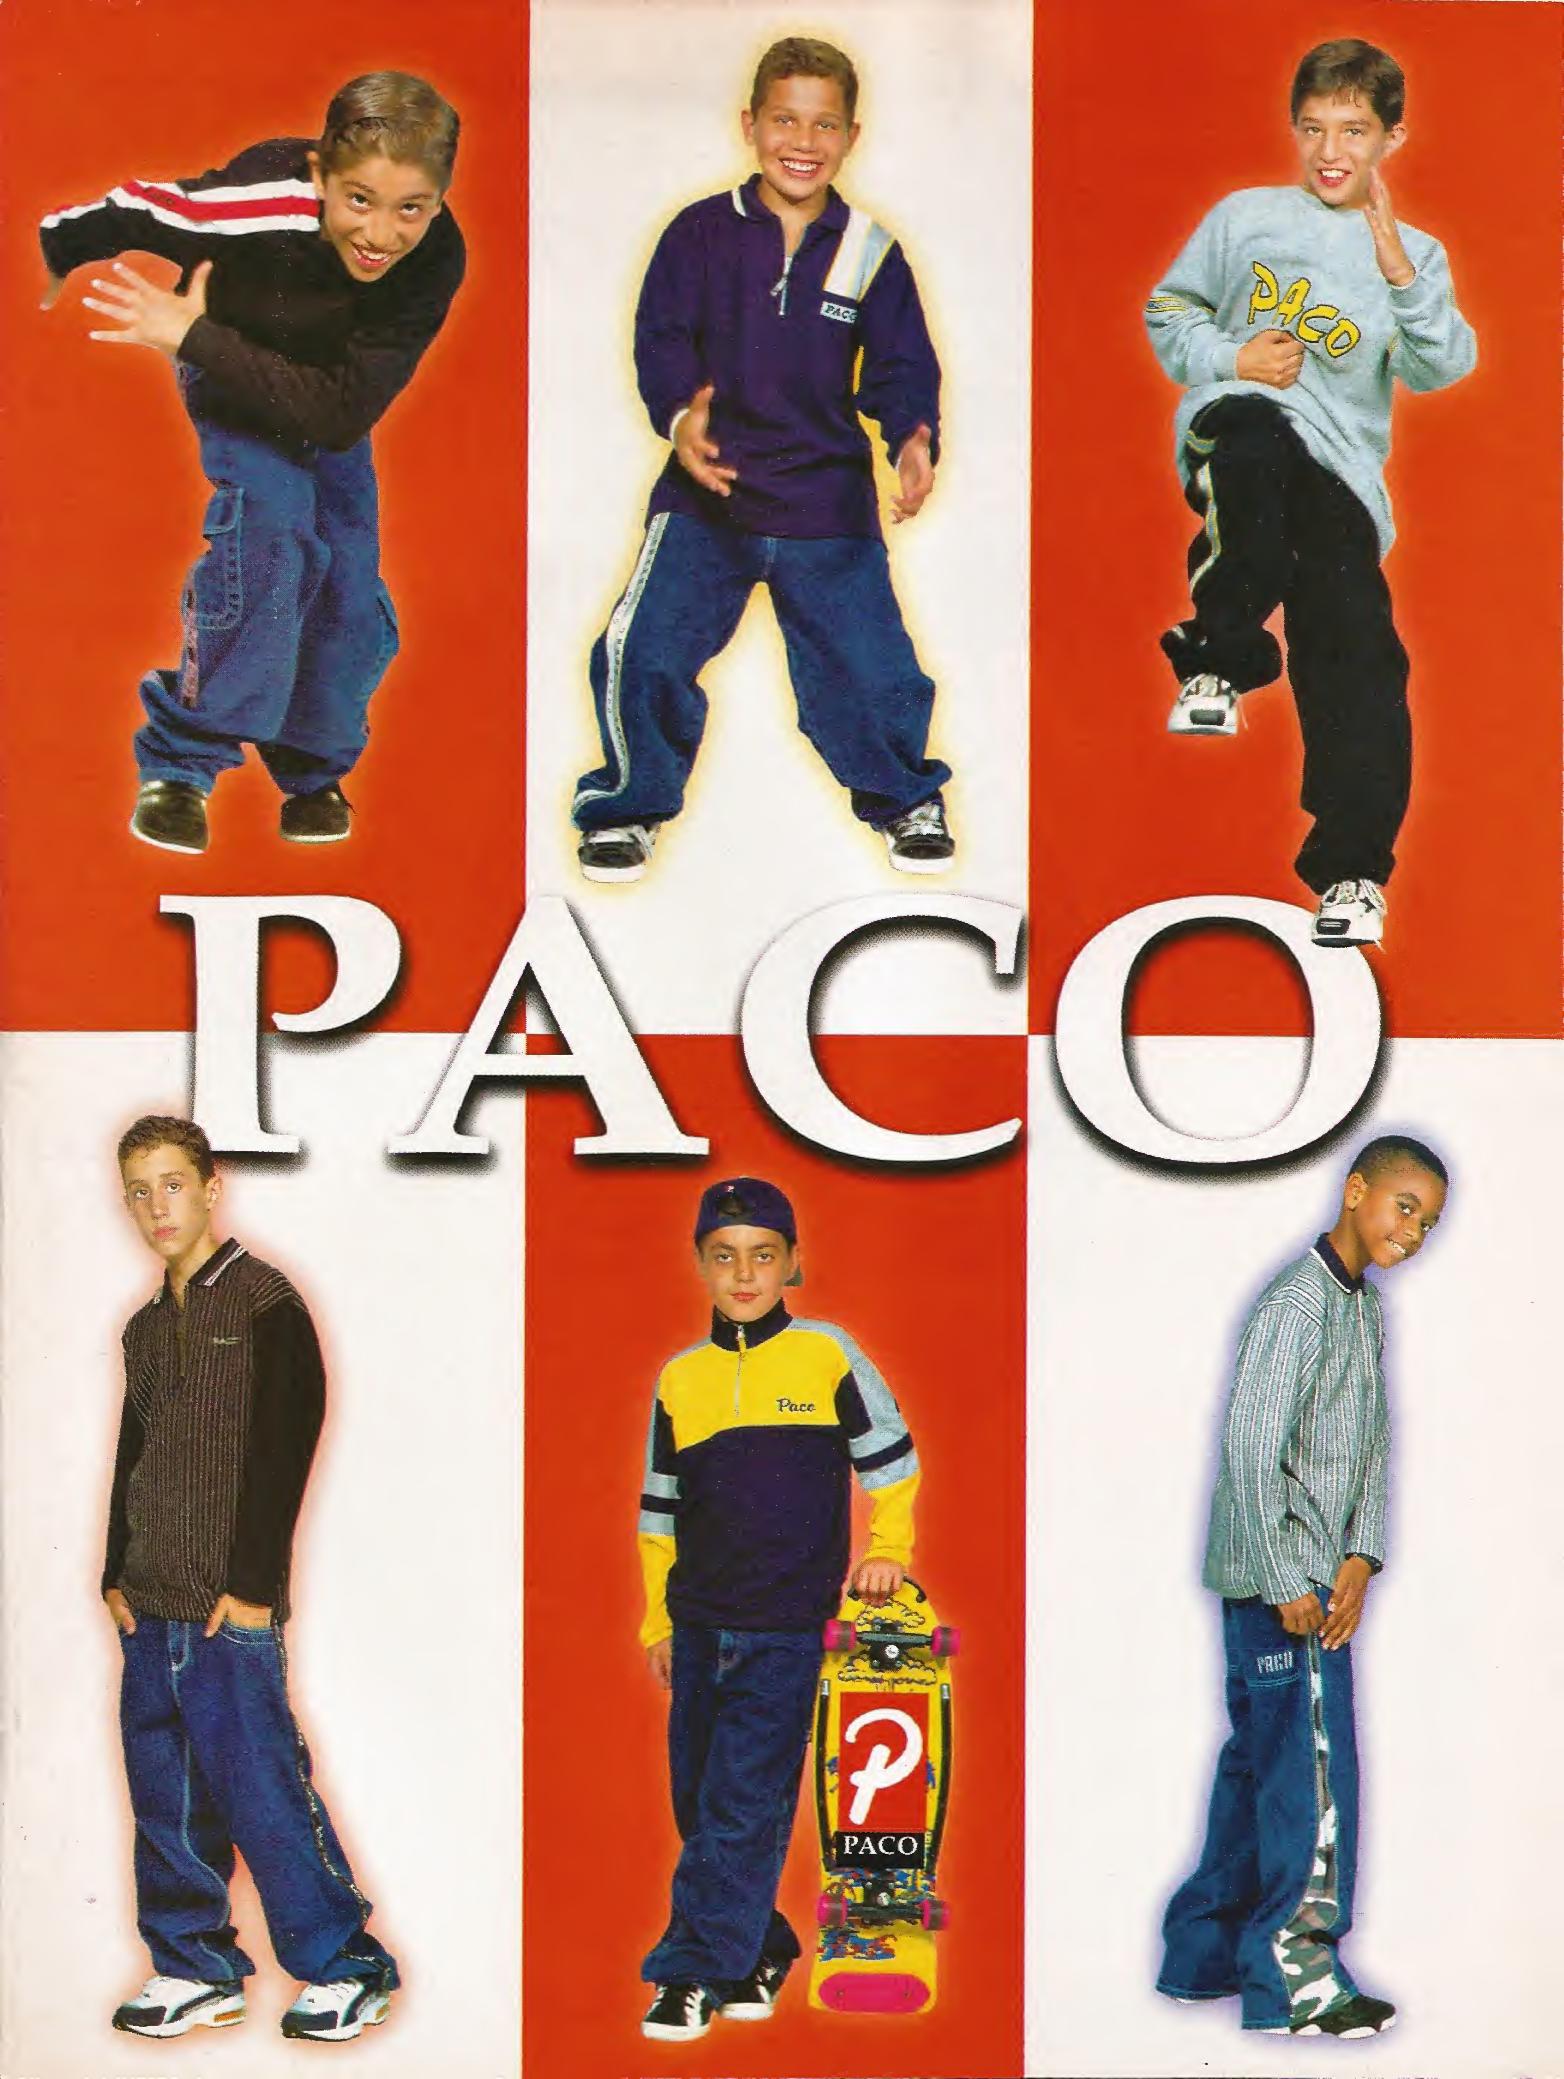

We change all four tires and put twenty-two gallons of gas in the car in just under seventeen seconds.

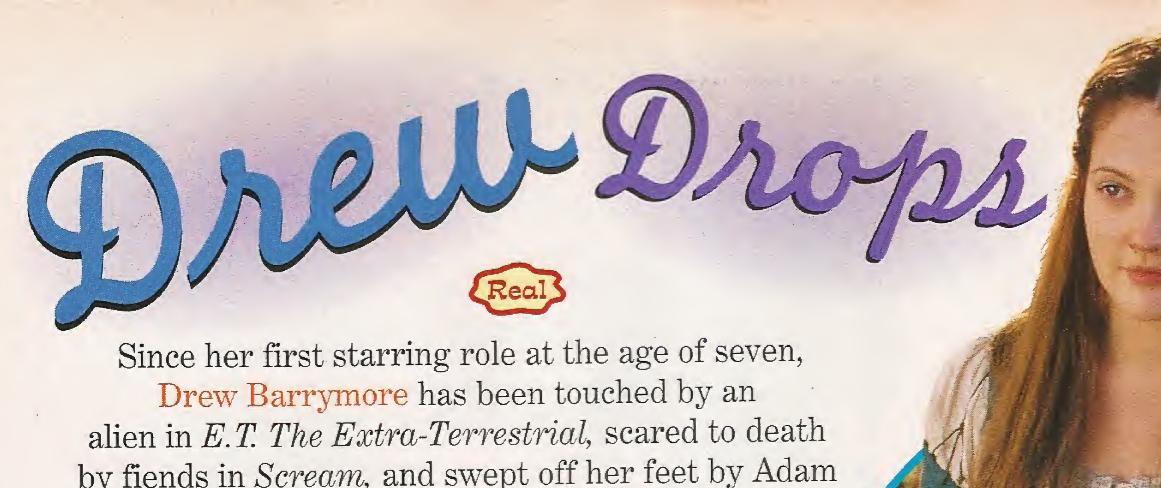

How important is one extra second?

A car traveling two hundred miles per hour goes the length of a football field each second. So if you lose just one second in the pit stop, your car is going to be a football-field length behind the other cars.

When you're taking a trip and you have to stop to use the bathroom, do you ever say "I have to make a pit stop"?

I suppose so. If it's a long trip.

Drew Barrymore has been touched by an alien in E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial, scared to death by fiends in Scream, and swept off her feet by Adam Sandler in The Wedding Singer. In her latest movie, Ever After, Drew went back in time to play Danielle, a brave and brainy princess-to-be.

Drew answered our questions wisely.

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE: How is Ever After different from the traditional Cinderella fairy tale?

DREW BARRYMORE: In the Cinderella I knew growing up, the prince fell in love with her at first sight. In this version, the prince falls in love with her heart and mind.

When you were a kid, did you dream of being Cinderella?

Yes, but as an adult, I dream about being this kind of Cinderella [in Ever After], because I don't want to sit around and wait to be rescued. Like her, I want to rescue other people.

What were your favorite fairy tales and stories growing up?

Cinderella, The Wizard of Oz, and Alice's Adventures in Wonderland.

Where did you stay while filming Ever After?

We all lived in the chateau [castle] in France, where the movie takes place. It's not a modern building. Boy, was I shocked to watch TV again after four months without it!

So how did you pass the time when you weren't working?

I read twelve books.

DOUBLE TAKE: Drew as a servant (top) and a noblewoman (left) with Ever After costar Dougray Scott.

Hey, Drew, how do you like them apples?

How did you like French food?

I starved, let me put it that way!

[laughs] I'm a vegetarian, and in France that is one of the worst things you can imagine, because they eat so much meat there. Basically I ate bread, cheese, and apples for breakfast, and bread, cheese, and tomatoes for lunch. It was really hard.

In this movie, you speak with an English accent. Was it difficult to learn?

Yes, very difficult. I worked with a coach for four months prior to filming.

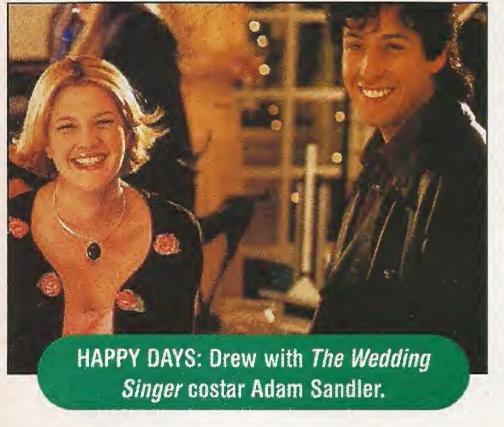

Are you at all like your character, Danielle?

I love that Danielle is so smart and well-read. I love that she's willing to overcome her fear of being punished for trying to save other people. Danielle is all the things that I want to be. I don't know if I'm there yet, but I'm certainly working very hard at it.

In Ever After, which costumes did you prefer: Danielle as a servant or as a noblewoman?

I loved the wings I wore at the ball, but the scenes where I got to be scruffy were even more fun—I enjoyed making candles, climbing trees, swimming in rivers, picking wildflowers, and chopping wood. These days, we turn on light switches, buy flowers at the flower store, and put Duraflame logs in our fireplaces. It's so different.

Was your long brown hair real or a wig? Most of it was my hair, but the very back was a hairpiece to give it length.

Which role was more challenging to play: Danielle or Julia from
The Wedding
Singer?
They were both a challenge,
but trying to re-create the Renaissance

period [1400s-1600s] in Ever After added an extra element of difficulty for everyone.

What is Adam Sandler, your costar in The Wedding Singer, like off-camera?

This is how thoughtful Adam is: He gave me a jukebox for my birthday and filled it up with all my favorite music—the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, Bob Dylan, and the Beach Boys.

Would you have him sing at your wedding?

If and when I get married, he'll certainly be there, and he knows the song I'd want him to sing: "That's How Strong My Love Is," by Otis Redding. It's my favorite song, and he put it in the very first slot of the jukebox he gave me.

What are your favorite TV shows?

Seinfeld and The Larry Sanders Show-both of which went off the air. I'm devastated!

THREE SCENES (clockwise from top left): Danielle pining alone; arguing with the prince; and obeying her evil stepmother, played by Anjelica Huston.

Macaroni and cheese.

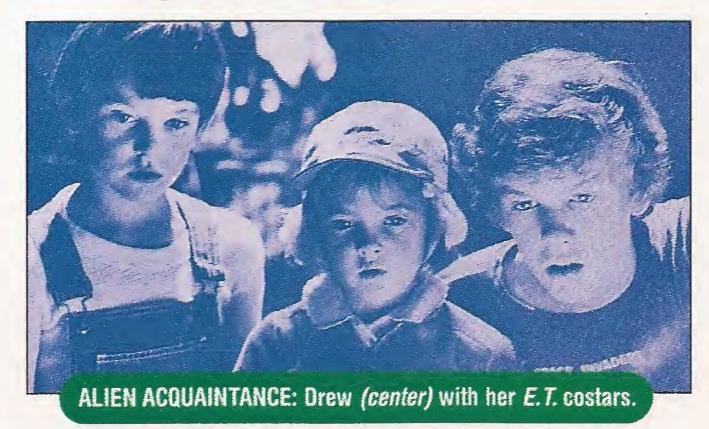

Is it true that you love butterflies?

Yes. I appreciate the caterpillar's metamorphosis—how even though something is seen as odd, it can become really beautiful. Growing up, I had a tough time in school. I was horribly made fun of, and I never fit in, but I've learned that there's an entire world beyond school where I was able to become a happy adult.

Do you have any pets?

I have four dogs, and chickens, roosters, lovebirds, parakeets, and a brand-new cat that came to my house one day and said, "I think I need some food"— he has been coming back ever since.

BACKSTREET

With a hit album and several hot videos under their belts, the BACKSTREET BOYS are busier than ever. We caught up with A.J. McLean, Howie Dorough, and Nick Carter before they took off on their first U.S. concert tour.

MAGAZINE: Do you get nervous before performing?

A.J. McLEAN: I don't get nervous—I'm a natural ham.

HOWIE DOROUGH: I get butterflies in my stomach, especially when family or friends are in the audience.

NICK CARTER: I was pretty nervous at the World Music Awards, because we had to sing a cappella [without music] in front of people such as Mariah Carey, Puff Daddy, and Gloria Estefan. My leg was twitching a little.

How do you pass the time on long bus rides when you're on tour?

A.J.: I talk on the phone, watch a movie, or write poetry.

HOWIE: I watch movies, but I usually fall asleep halfway through.

NICK: I play video games.

Nick

When you're on the road, what do you miss most?

A.J.: Sleeping in my own bed. HOWIE: My mom's cooking.

NICK: Playing with my little brother and sisters.

What's the funniest thing that has ever happened onstage?

HOWIE: One time, during a song called "Get Down," Nick swung his arms to the side, not realizing that I was standing right next to him. The next thing I knew, I was floating in the air, praying for a pillow to catch me. Luckily there was a security guard right there, and I just plopped right into his arms.

When you were younger, did other kids ever make fun of you for singing?

A.J.: Oh, yeah. In fact, a friend just told me that back in school I was known as a real nerd. I said, "Well, thank you! I didn't know at the time, but thanks for bringing that to my attention now!"

HOWIE: When I was twelve, I had a very high voice, so once in a while I'd hear chuckles when I sang in musicals. In high school, though, kids started respecting me for performing.

NICK: Kids definitely gave me a hard time, but that made me strive even harder for success.

Do you play any instruments?

A.J.: I'm learning to play the bass guitar, and I want to learn the saxophone.

NICK: I've played the drums for four years.

HOWIE: I took guitar lessons when I was younger, and I decided to pick it up again when we were working on the "Quit Playing Games (With My Heart)" video.

Have you had a chance to meet any of your idols?

A.J.: I got to meet one person who I really, truly wanted to meet—Gwen Stefani—at the Billboard Music Awards.

HOWIE: I met Jon Secada. I'm a big fan of both his Spanish music and his English music. I'd love to meet Mariah Carey.

NICK: I'd really like to meet Steve Perry from the band Journey.

Do you have any celebrity crushes?

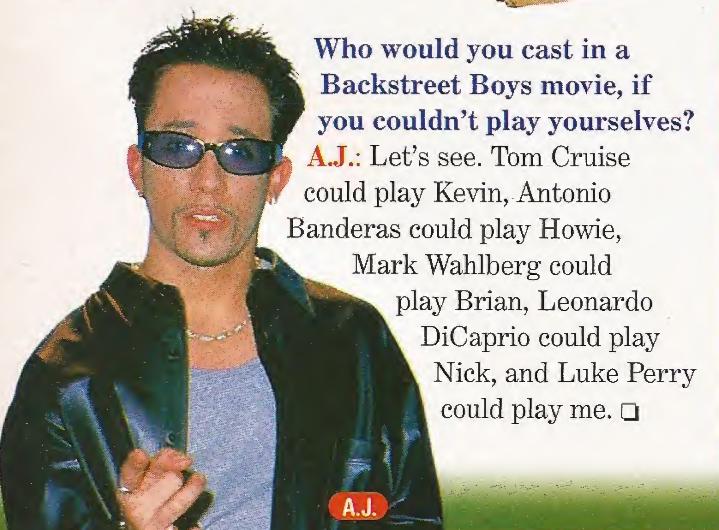

A.J.: Jennifer Love Hewitt, Geena Davis, and Denise Richards [from Starship Troopers].

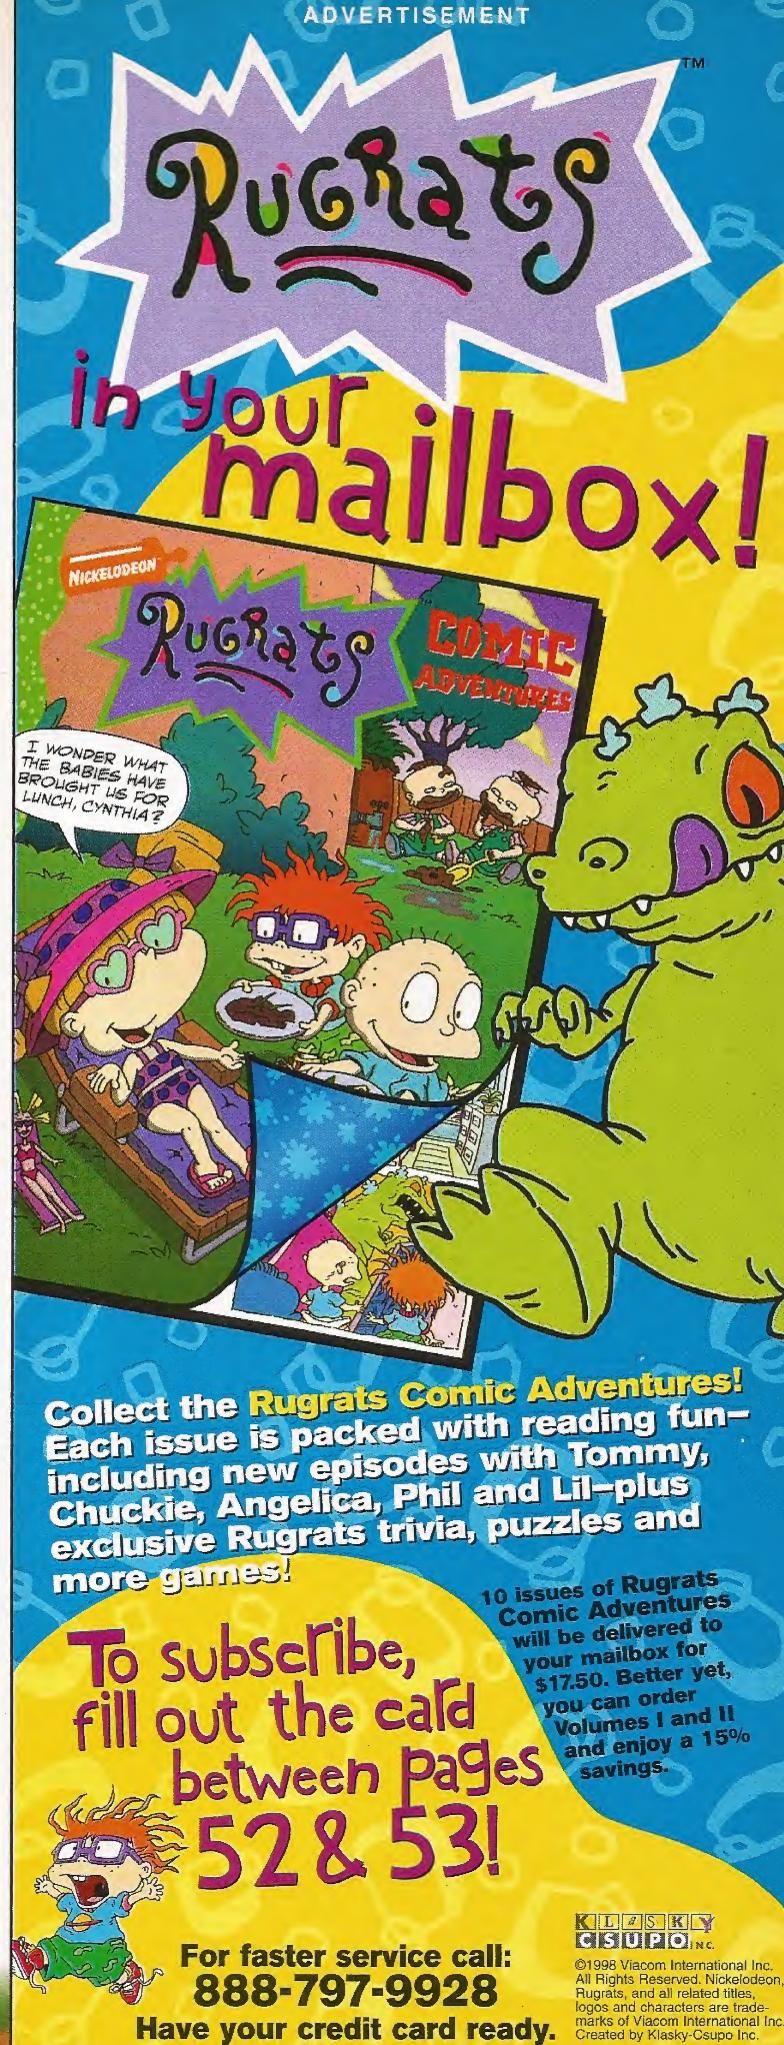

HOWIE: Salma Hayek [from

Fools Rush In].

NICK: Christina Ricci.

ALITHORPHS

you might wonder how normal teens can turn themselves into animals. If you've only seen the covers of K.A. Applegate's Animorphs books, Here's the lowdown:

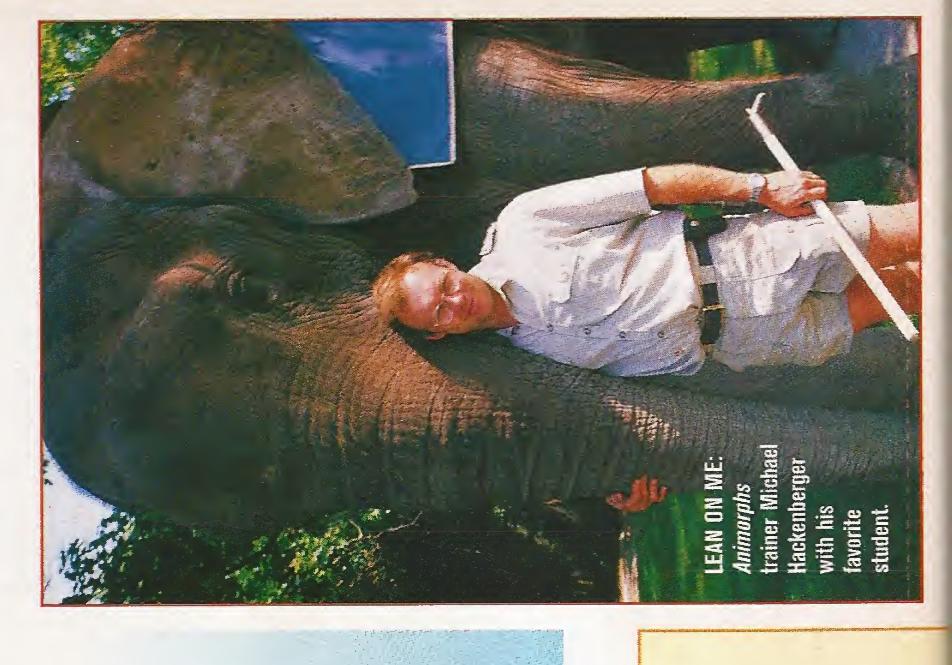

he died, Elfangor gave the teens being secretly invaded by the Yeerks-an evil alien species that takes touch. With Elfangor gone and Yeerk-controlled humans everywhere, a powerful weapon: the ability to morph into any living creature they found a dying alien named Elfangor. He warned them that Earth was It all started when five kids (Jake, Rachel, Cassie, Tobias, and Marco) control of people's brains. Just before the Animorphs must rely on their new abilities-and on one another to defeat the Yeerks and save the planet.

The Invasion

On Nickel-O-Zone's new Animorphs, human characters turn into wild animals through some pretty special special effects. But on the set in Toronto, Canada, actors and animals—from lions to lizards—work side by side. We recently chatted with the humans about their animalistic coworkers.

MORE NEWS FROM NICKELOBEON September 1998 HOME BOYS

The star of Nickelodeon's new comedy Cousin Skeeter is not your average kid. Fast-talking and worldly wise, Skeeter manages to turn his cousin Bobby's life upside down and save the day—all at once. To help you get to know them, we collected the following facts on the mismatched cousins.

Real Heart and the president of

Where you ask the president of Nickelodeon, Herb Scannell, anything you want.

Were you ever the teacher's pet?
I think I was the teacher's pet for one year, in first grade. Then I became more of a class clown, though I never got sent to the principal's office. I was just a prankster.

Did you ever sleep in a bunk bed? Yes, my brother and I slept in bunk beds when I was six or seven. My brother slept in the top bed, and I slept in the bottom one, because I was younger.

What's your favorite amusement park ride?

I like water slides.

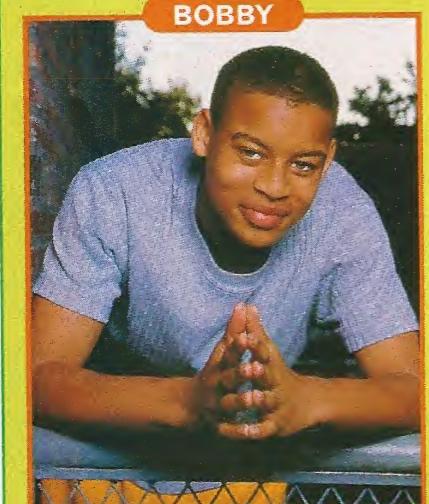

Were you afraid of the dentist when you were a kid?

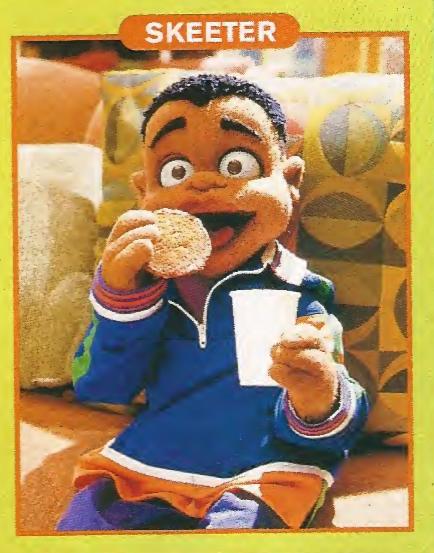

Yes, I hated going to the dentist. I have fillings in just about every tooth. I still hate going to the dentist—when I'm there I read a magazine and wait for it to be over.

Were you a picky eater?

I was a very picky eater. My mom made rice and beans a lot, and I used to separate the beans and put the sauce only on the rice.

What's New on Nick by Erica Pass

Animorphs and Cousin Skeeter aren't the only shows appearing in Nickelodeon's new Nickel-O-Zone. Below are some new and returning shows you'll find Sundays through Fridays, from 8 to 9 PM*.

What's New With Woo? It's moving day for Shelby Woo as she leaves Cocoa Beach, Florida, for a town near Boston, where there's less sunshine, more snow, and just as many mysteries to solve. The new season of The Mystery Files of Shelby Woo premieres on Sunday, September 6, at 8 PM*.

Go Wild!

The Wild Thornberrys may sound like the latest fancy fruit, but it's actually the newest Nicktoon. Traveling from jungle to jungle, the Thornberry family has its share of adventures—especially 12-year-old Eliza, who has a powerful secret: She can talk to the animals. Here's another secret: Lacey Chabert of Party of Five and Lost in Space is the voice of Eliza. The show premieres on Tuesday, September 1, at 8 PM*.

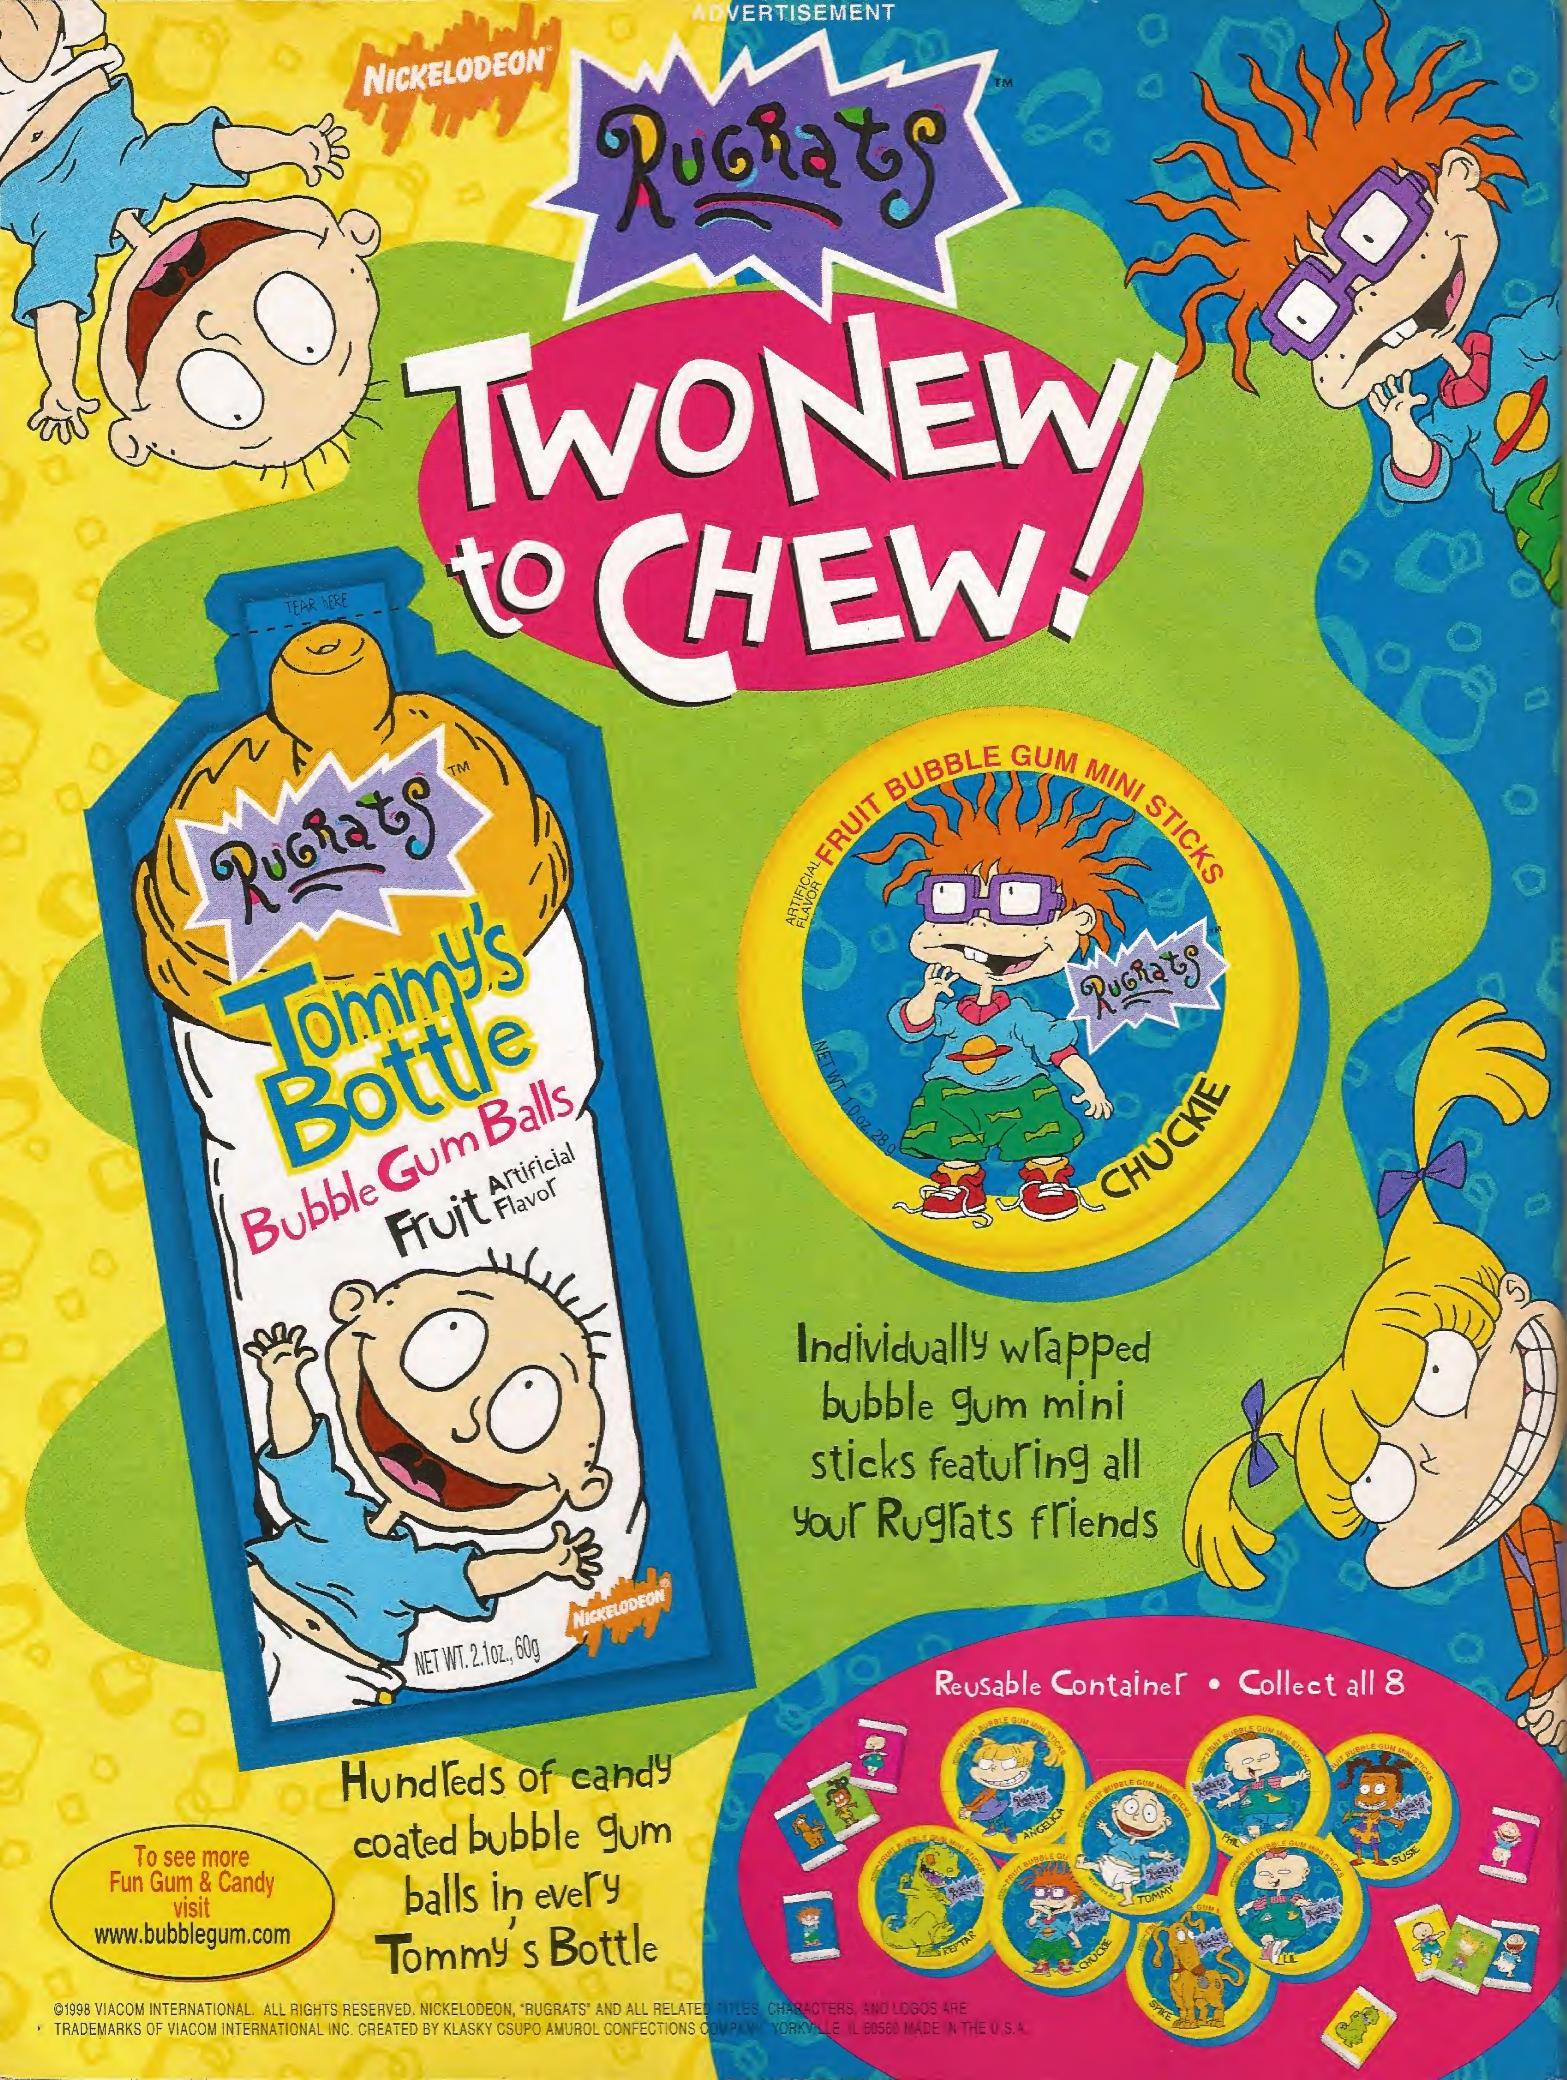

Strange Journey

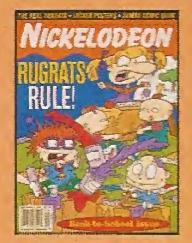

A special two-part episode of The Journey of Allen Strange airs on Monday, September 28 (Part 1), and Wednesday, September 30 (Part 2), at 8 PM*. In it, alien Allen and his earthling friends Robbie and Josh discover a portal to another galaxy in the middle of a bowling alley. The new season of Allen Strange premieres Monday,

What happened when one head bumped into another head?

It started a brain reaction.

Why did the geniuses' baseball game end so late? There was a brain delay.

> What kind of music do brains like best? Heavy mental.

> How does a cerebellum say good-bye? With a brain wave.

Why didn't Rosalind take the math test? She wanted to save it for a brainy day.

What did Bob's boss say as he stuck his finger up Bob's nose?

"I want to pick your brain."

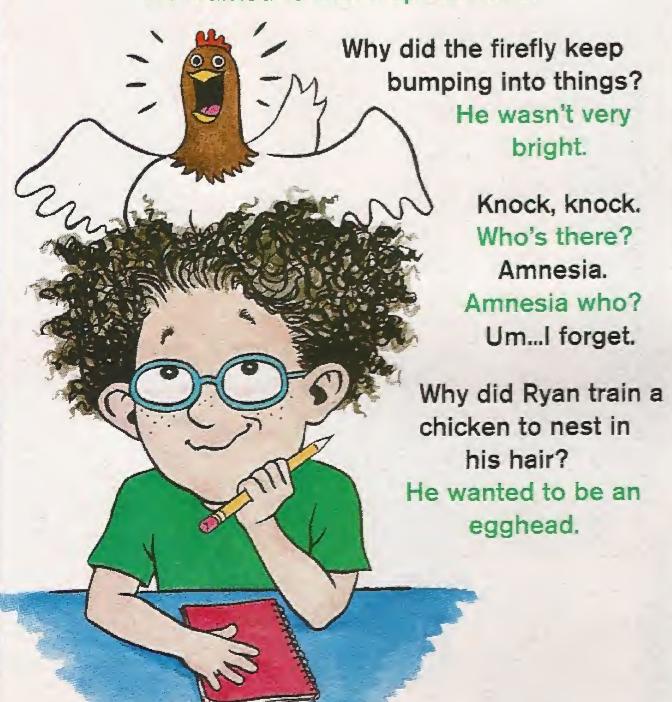

I'd have a bone to pick with him.

Why did the sculptor go crazy? He lost his marbles.

What do you call an expert on minds? A real know-brainer.

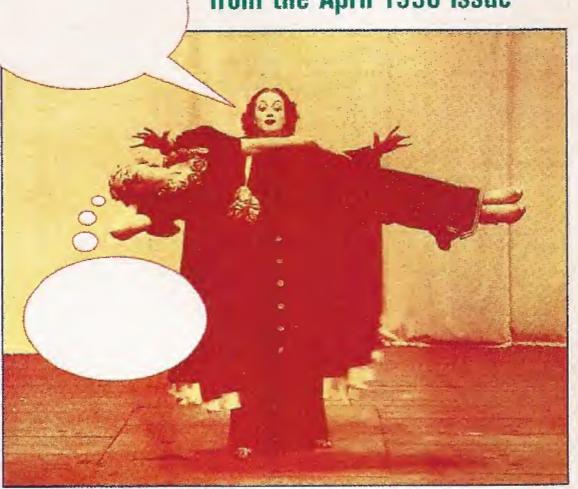

What did the philosopher say to his guest? "Would you like something to think?"

Why did Daniel stick lipstick in his ear? He wanted to make up his mind.

Along the back wall: The poster of the human body has been replaced with a poster of Xena; the overhead light is a disco ball; the alphabet strip over the blackboard says "Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaiiii..."; the boy who was writing "I will not pass notes" has switched it to "I will not pass gas"; and the chalkboard eraser is now a hamburger. The teacher's desk area: The teacher is gone and two kids are playing table tennis on her desk; the apple has been replaced by a baseball; the pens in the pen holder are lollipops; and the map on the computer screen is now a video game. Rows of desks-Front row: The girl who was reading is now turning around and talking, and her green ponytail holder is blue; the boy next to her has stopped writing and is sitting on his desk blowing a bubble; and the boy in the orange shirt is playing table tennis. Second row: The middle girl is playing table tennis; and the red-haired girl has stopped writing and is lying on her desk playing with a yo-yo. Back row: The girl on the left has put the wastebasket on her desk and is shooting baskets; the middle boy is seated in a bumper car; the boy in the football jersey is now climbing up the wall behind the teacher's desk; a dog is sitting on the boy's desk, and the boy's chair is knocked over. Right side of picture: The turtle in the terrarium is sitting in a chair watching TV; and a genie is coming out of the beaker on the table.
